

Afghan 'murderer' is put to death in front of hundreds at sports stadium in Taliban's first public execution since Biden pulled out of the country

An Afghan man convicted of murder was executed in public Wednesday, the Taliban said, the first confirmation of such a sentence since the hardline Islamists returned to power.

Last month Taliban supreme leader Hibatullah Akhundzada ordered judges to fully enforce aspects of Islamic law that include public executions, stonings and floggings, and the amputation of limbs from thieves.

They have carried out several public floggings since then, but Wednesday's execution in Farah - capital of the western province of the same name - is the first the Taliban have acknowledged.
