

Argentina: Milei Bans Government from Using Woke 'Inclusive' Language

Argentina announced on Tuesday that President Javier Milei ordered a ban on the use of leftist "inclusive" language across all public administration offices and documents.

The announcement was made on Tuesday during presidential spokesman Manuel Adorni's press conference. Adorni added that "everything related to the gender-based perspective" will also be banned throughout the national public administration.

"They are going to proceed, to initiate, the proceedings to ban inclusive language and everything related to gender-based perspective throughout the national public administration," Adorni said. "Of course, you already know all the details. You are not going to be able to use the letter 'e', the '@ symbol', the 'x' and avoid the unnecessary use of the feminine in all documents of the public administration."
