

Buffalo lake-effect snowstorm: 2 deaths blamed on snow clearing; 4 feet of snow expected

A lake-effect snowstorm dumped several inches of snow over western New York early Friday, with snowfall totals expected to reach at least 4 feet through Sunday in the Buffalo area.

The storm was blamed for the deaths of two people stricken with “cardiac events” while clearing snow.

Eleven counties remained under a state of emergency Friday as an intense snow band whipped the area.

New York state’s Twitter account shared a photo of a yardstick buried in 19 inches of snow in South Cheektowaga west of Buffalo shortly before sunrise. “Continue to stay off the roads and stay safe,” the tweet read.
