

Busloads of Illegal Aliens Sent to Kamala Harris's Home on Christmas Eve Were Headed for NY: Officials

Multiple busloads of illegal aliens that were dropped off near Vice President Kamala Harris's residence in Washington, D.C. on Christmas Eve were initially set to arrive in New York, according to relief agencies.

Tatiana Laborde, the managing director of SAMU First Response, a relief agency working with the city of Washington to assist the aliens, told The New York Post that they were informed by nonprofit groups on the border that the buses would arrive in D.C. on Saturday instead of New York on Sunday, as initially planned.

This, she believes, was owing to heavy snowfall in the north of the country, which has brought transport to a standstill and left thousands without power.

Madhvi Bahl, an organizer with the Migrant Solidarity Mutual Aid Network, also told The New York Times that the buses were rerouted owing to freezing temperatures and road closures.
