

Elon Musk's X to stage town hall with Donald Trump

Elon Musk's social media platform X will stage a town hall with former President Donald Trump — three years after he was suspended from the site in the wake of the Jan. 6 Capitol riots.

The presumptive Republican nominee for president, who was convicted Thursday in connection with a hush-money payment to porn star Stormy Daniels, will answer submitted questions during the livestream event, which will also be broadcast in a partnership deal with cable channel NewsNation.

The social media company is also planning a similar town hall with Robert F. Kennedy, Jr, who is running for president as an independent.

President Joe Biden was invited by the social media company to do a debate or a town hall, but he declined, according to The Wall Street Journal, which first reported news of the X sit-downs.

The date, location and moderators for the town halls have yet to be announced.
