

‘EU refugee crisis isn’t a crisis it’s the new REALITY’ says French MP

FORMER French Justice Minister Christiane Taubira said on Thursday that the global refugee crisis was here to stay, and that “cruel” immigration policies like the ones advocated by Washington would not deter migrants and refugees.

Christiane Taubira, former French Justice Minister

“The [refugee] crisis is a climactic moment because a crisis that doesn’t end isn’t a crisis, it’s a new state of play,” Mrs Taubira told France’s Europe 1 radio.

“The new state of play is the new reality: international migration flows will continue because of war, poverty, famine, rising water levels, the submergence of island territories, climate change, but also because of the desire to start a new life elsewhere,” she said.

“It is inconceivable to imagine that all we need to do [to solve the migrant crisis] is barricade ourselves - that’s the kind of thing Trump would do!”

US President Donald Trump on Wednesday backed down and abandoned his controversial policy of separating immigrant children from their families on the US-Mexico border after shocking reports that some 1,995 children had been taken from their parents between April 19 and May 31 sparked international outcry.

RELATED ARTICLES

- World Refugee Day 2018: What is it, what is theme, how many displaced?

- EU leaders planning to create refugee centres outside Europe

“We’re used to the American president’s U-turns, but what is so tragic about the current situation is that he’s toying with people’s freedoms and with children’s well-being. He’s playing around with human rights ... and we can only be overcome with emotion in the face of such cruelty, cynicism and lack of shame,” the former justice chief added.

The international community, Mrs Taubira said, is “weak and powerless” in the face of Washington and seemingly “indifferent” to Mr Trump’s shenanigans.

Europeans have become the “spectators” of an “abominable” show in which Mr Trump is the lead protagonist, she warned: “Europe is not a political power - it must first position itself as a political power if it is to become a geopolitical power.”

World leaders must become aware of the magnitude of the migration phenomenon, which is more than “just a crisis,” she continued.

The French far-right, for its part, hailed the US’ unbending stance on immigration, saying that while Mr Trump had given in to calls to end family separations, he was unlikely to soften his approach.

“A firm immigration policy is more humane and fairer” than a weak one, Nicolas Bay, the secretary-general of nationalist leader Marine Le Pen’s Rassemblement National party, told Europe 1.

“I don’t think Mr Trump made a U-turn [on immigration]. He simply solved a thorny problem that had humanitarian implications,” Mr Bay said.

RELATED ARTICLES

- German Minister BLASTS Angela Merkel over REFUGEE policies
  - Euro caused Italian economic MISERY! German MEP SLAMS EU for NO GROWTH
  - France offers to take in Aquarius ship migrants as tensions soar
-
-

Source: <https://www.express.co.uk/news/world/977720/EU-refugee-migrant-crisis-Brexit-news-France-Christiane-Taubira>

[Disclaimer]