

Five students wounded in Michigan State shooting still critical, police say

(Reuters) -Five students wounded in a shooting at Michigan State University remain in critical condition, three days after a heavily armed gunman entered two buildings at the campus and opened fire, killing three other students, police said on Thursday.

The gunman, identified as Anthony Dwayne McRae of Lansing, Michigan, shot himself to death after the rampage on Monday night. McRae had no known affiliation to the university in East Lansing, about 90 miles (145 km) northwest of Detroit.

McRae entered Berkey Hall, an academic building on the school's northern campus, and began shooting, authorities said. He then fled to another building and opened fire there before police arrived.

Police found the suspect's body nearly four miles (6.5 km) from the campus at 11:35 p.m., about three hours after the first report of a shooting.
