

German Chancellor Scholz vows tougher knife laws after Solingen stabbings

The German chancellor spoke after laying a white flower at a makeshift memorial in the western German city.

German Chancellor Olaf Scholz vowed to toughen knife laws and step up deportations of rejected asylum-seekers on Monday as he visited the scene of the knife attack in Solingen.

A suspected Islamic extremist from Syria is accused of killing three people at a festival in the western German city last week.

Speaking after he joined regional officials in laying a white flower at a makeshift memorial, Scholz said he was “furious and angry” about the attack, in which eight people were also wounded.
