

Historic Reconciliation: Egyptian President Visits Turkey After 12-Year Hiatus

Egyptian President Abdel Fattah al-Sisi arrived in Ankara for the first presidential visit in 12 years, signaling a warming of relations with Turkey. The visit follows Turkish President Tayyip Erdogan's trip to Cairo in February. Talks will focus on regional cooperation and joint initiatives in various sectors.

Egyptian President Abdel Fattah al-Sisi made a landmark visit to Ankara on Wednesday, marking the first presidential visit between Egypt and Turkey in 12 years. This visit comes as both nations work to mend a decade-long strained relationship.

Earlier this year, Turkish President Tayyip Erdogan visited Cairo for the first time since 2012, signalling a significant step toward restoration of ties. Relations had soured in 2013 following the ousting of Egypt's then-president, Mohamed Mursi, an ally of Turkey.
