

How is the latest Ukrainian raid into Russian territory different?

Euronews takes a closer look into what we know so far about the ongoing cross-border Ukrainian assault in Russia's Kursk region that began on Tuesday.

In the past, Ukrainian forces have launched a few incursions into Russian territory, with the most recent being in March this year, when three anti-Kremlin armed units crossed into Belgorod and Kursk regions from Ukraine, allegedly resulting in clashes with Russian forces in several settlements.

All of those incursions were almost immediately followed by relentless attacks on the regional capital of Sumy and the region.
