

Macron Rolls the Dice... Again: Appoints Centrist Ally François Bayrou as New French Prime Minister

French political veteran François Bayrou, a long time ally of President Macron has been named as the head of the new French government after the last collapsed in record time.

French President Emmanuel Macron is unable to dispose of his three-way-split parliament, so instead he has attempted to put together a new government after the last became the shortest-lived in modern history. The job was too much for skilled negotiator Michel Barnier who found himself in the job for just three months until his government collapsed last month, now Macron turns to a man described as a “maneuverer, champion of pluralism and compromise”.
