

New Zealand court orders immediate heart surgery of baby of anti-vax parents

Sydney, Australia, Dec 7 (EFE).- A New Zealand court on Wednesday took the medical guardianship of an infant who needed a life-saving heart surgery as his parents were blocking the medical intervention because potential blood donors may be vaccinated against Covid-19.

The order allowed doctors to conduct the surgery “without further delay.”

Justice Ian Gault said the court had taken temporary guardianship of the 4-month-old baby from Wednesday until at least Jan. 31 next year.
