

Pool of Siloam to Open in Jerusalem After 2,000 Years

The Pool of Siloam, where Jesus is said to have healed a blind man, will soon be opened to the public for the first time in 2,000 years.

The pool located in the southern part of the City of David archaeological site in Jerusalem is cherished by Christians and Jews.

It is currently being excavated by archaeologists and will either be opened to the public piece by piece or once the entire site is unearthed.

Plans to open up the Pool of Siloam were announced just before the new year by the Israel Antiquities Authority, the Israel National Parks Authority and the City of David Foundation.
