

Russia May Consider Supplying S-300 Missile Systems to Syria

Russian President Vladimir Putin condemned the overnight U.S.-led missile attack on Syria and called for an emergency meeting of the United Nations Security Council.

Russia may consider supplying S-300 missile systems to Syria and other countries, Colonel-General Sergei Rudskoi said on Saturday after U.S., French and British air strikes on Syria.

Rudskoi said the U.S. strikes in Syria were aimed at destabilising the situation in the region.

The situation in Damascus and other towns and cities in Syria is calm now, Rudskoi said.

Russian President Vladimir Putin condemned the overnight U.S.-led missile attack on Syria and called for an emergency meeting of the United Nations Security Council, the Kremlin said on Saturday.

Putin said the U.S. actions in Syria made the humanitarian catastrophe worse and caused pain for civilians, as well as damaging international relations.

Source: <https://www.haaretz.com/middle-east-news/syria/russia-may-consider-supplying-s-300-missile-systems-to-syria-1.5995495>

[Disclaimer]