

Saudi Arabia Welcomes Iran's President for Anti-Israel 'Islamic Cooperation' Summit

Iranian President Ebrahim Raisi visited Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, this weekend for a meeting of 57 Muslim world leaders to condemn Israel in response to its ongoing self-defense operation against the genocidal Hamas terrorist organization.

Raisi's visit to Saudi Arabia was his first since assuming the office of the presidency - which is subordinate to "supreme leader" Ayatollah Ali Khamenei - and included an in-person meeting with the de-facto leader of the country, Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman. It was his first such engagement since Saudi Arabia and Iran restored diplomatic ties in March as a result of talks between the two countries in Beijing, China. China welcomed both countries to its BRICS coalition - which also includes Brazil, Russia, India, and South Africa - shortly after they formally mended the bilateral relationship.
