

Volodymyr Zelensky wants to meet China over its Ukraine peace plan

- The president says he has not seen the proposal, which Beijing has promised to publish in time for the 1-year anniversary of Russia's invasion
- He says it is a 'very good fact' that China started talking about Ukraine and 'sent some signals'

Ukraine's President Volodymyr Zelensky said Thursday he had not seen a peace plan promised by China but wanted to meet Beijing over their proposal before assessing it.

Beijing has promised to publish its "political solution" to the Ukraine conflict this week, in time for the first anniversary of Russia's February 24 invasion of its neighbour.

"China have told us they have such an initiative. But I have not seen the document yet," Zelensky said during a news conference with visiting Spanish Prime Minister Pedro Sanchez in Kyiv.

Beijing has sought to position itself as a neutral party in the conflict, while maintaining close ties with strategic ally Russia.
