

Weekly Update by Mark Armstrong - 3 December 2021

Greetings from Tyler,

All the authorities are holding out the prospect of extreme mandates on the news of the new variant. They're not sure about anything, but stand by. It's liable to confer all power to our tormentors. Maybe it depends upon where you get your information, but we're hearing that some of those infected with the new variant are "fully vaccinated." Then we're treated to all manner of disdain if we're not doing what we're told. We must be crazy.

Some courts are upholding mandates, others have ruled against them. How can Judges be expected to make an informed ruling with contradicting messages being issued from every source? One ruling says, "There are grave Constitutional issues." You mean there's some authority higher than the light loafers on CNN!?! Yeah, we think so.

The formula has been tested, and shown remarkable promise. A contagious disease with the implication that government will protect the public assuming the public is prepared to follow orders without question. Given what we've lived through already, some might be forgiven for a lack of trust. The over-arching message from all government dependent parties is that everyone be vaccinated or face monumental penalties which are still being contrived. Papers are required, and travel restrictions apply. Have a nice vacation.

It turns out the great (in his own estimation) coronavirus whisperer may have some explaining to do as regards some of the experimentation with AIDS and chemotherapy on orphan children in the 80's. He's not famous for that. Yet. If there's some hope on the horizon, it may be found in that adage about pride coming before a fall. We're seeing some of the most arrogant people, those who would dismiss us as crazy conspiracy theorists, go down in flames. I could name three right off the top. Inexplicable, ruinous tragedies are befalling the most arrogant people on earth. Let's hope it's a trend. Strike that. It's a Law of Nature, and we're seeing it borne out.

It turns out the economy isn't what was projected. The job market has disappointed the prognosticators across the board. Who'd have guessed? Maybe lock-downs and mandates all over the place aren't good for commerce. The big entities aren't distressed, but Mom and Pop have been taking it on the chin, and in the arm if they've followed government instructions. Only the well-padded could hope to survive the "orders" handed down here and there across the United States.

But it seems they're having a good time in Dubai. An Israeli news channel has been following the celebrations of the fiftieth anniversary celebrations. Amid skyscrapers like few places on earth are swarms of celebrants, and they're not wearing their masks!

It's hard to believe we're still obsessing over this, a year and a half after being told we needed two weeks to "flatten the curve." But the "authorities" have decided nothing has ever been this successful. Never has the public submitted like this, with grave fear hanging over everyone's head. You must agree to nonsensical blather, otherwise you may find that your freedoms are curtailed to an alarming degree. This may be worked out by the courts, where evidence and under-oath testimony are required. But we've also seen some astounding decisions that seemed to hinge on political outcomes rather than anything else.

If you've paid attention, you've heard a lot of buzz about the case before the Supreme Court. Unfortunately "precedent" plays a huge role, even when it was set in error. We better not get our hopes up. Chances are it will be a nuanced decision throwing responsibility back to the States. Some states will be accused of all manner of discriminatory mischief against women. Having heard highlights of the arguments, the abortion defense is arguing "bodily autonomy!"

So let's get this straight. The very same philosophy doesn't apply elsewhere? No need to spell it out. They're all through trying to convince us of anything. It's all down to whether we'll bow down to dictates, and do what we're told by the mainstream unquestionably. There are so many contradictions floating around, nobody knows who to believe.

But the mainstream has accepted "evolution" in the name of science, and the really smart ones have concluded there is no God. We're told not to question science, because well, Dr. Fauci is science according to his own reckoning. The bad news for the global warming, green energy, corona fear factory is that God is the author of science. Any questions? Maybe we should consider what He says for a change.

Mark
