

Weekly Update by Mark Armstrong - December 27, 2024

Greetings from Tyler,

It's already started. The mainstream is trying it's level best to create some controversy about immigration. Trump has put Canada on notice, and I can't help wondering how everybody's feeling about it. I know Canadians are proud, but I'm pretty sure everywhere is going to be jealous.

The whole world is seeing what's going on over here, and I can't imagine they don't want in. They're going to see the exuberance of Americans and the nations are taking note. I get the feeling that the "save the planet" movement has taken its course. How can the planet be saved if China and India won't play ball? Has anybody seen Al Gore lately?

Our heads may explode on January 20th. There are geniuses working to cut waste now. We thought we'd never see it. Everything was so entrenched that it was just the way things worked, and we didn't know how it would end, but it wouldn't be pretty. Is it dawning a new day?

The only thing I have to go by is the election of Ronald Reagan after four years of embarrassment. It was like someone turned on the afterburners. Business ramped up in a big way. It's not nearly as bad now as it was during the Carter years, but it's a different situation. But no less important.

The way we were going in the Carter years, we wouldn't have lasted. Ronald Reagan turned things around in a way that has lasted through all these bad presidencies. At least the nation wasn't completely destroyed yet. There was only so much they could do. But they've grown our bureaucracy until we thought it would never be put right. Hang on to your head.

With people as smart as the ones being chosen, it's going to be fun. Liberal tears are like rain. And no doubt there will be showers in the months ahead. Donald Trump is already President. Decisions are being made, plans taken, and the other nations are taking notice. They can't take advantage of us anymore. Sometimes it's been hard to know if a president was even on our side. We don't have to wonder anymore.

Our job, Dad's job, was to chronicle the downfall of western civilizations and look toward prophetic fulfillment. But it looks like we've been granted a reprieve. Not to be complacent about it, on the contrary. We could see this whole thing go up like a firework if we don't recognize the opportunity. We've been given another chance, and our children should know. We were so beat down by the media, so sure of themselves as they preached one false narrative after another. Notice how everything's gone quiet?

They now know, if they didn't before, that Americans are not buying what they're trying to ram into our brains. We don't believe in global warming or that we're in an "existential crisis." They can try that out on somebody else, it's already fallen out of favor.

It's been hard watching society in a mad rush for X-mas. But Santa didn't save us. God had mercy on us.
