

Weekly Update by Mark Armstrong - February 17, 2023

Greetings from Tyler,

There are so many crises brewing we hardly know where to start. We have an embarrassment acting as president. He desecrated the world's view of America with the Afghan withdrawal, with details painful enough to make you mad.

Now they're telling us that the "conservative" commentators who we think are on our side are anti-Trump, thought he orchestrated January 6, and made the mistake of putting their thoughts in texts and statements, repeated by others. You'll see what I'm talking about. No doubt the mainstream will flog this to distraction in the days ahead, hoping we'll doubt everything we think we know. Big names have made comments they may live to regret.

Watching the U. S. political theater is upsetting. People who should be on the side of saving the country from the destruction are insulting each other. They're trying to make us doubt what we know and put us off balance. Have we not learned? Putting your faith in fallible human beings is a fool's errand. Finding out that people we trust are going to battle with each other isn't very comforting.

How many mysteries are we supposed to figure out? Why did the train derail in Ohio? Does anyone even care? People with the responsibility aren't exactly forthcoming. They were afraid to attend the meetings that were supposed to calm things down. As it stands, we don't have the answers that you'd think would be forthcoming. But pipelines are dangerous. Shut them down! Climate change, you know!

We're now on the brink of big trouble. Putin has asked the UN to investigate the blowing up of the Nord Stream gas pipeline. Watching the pretender say that he'd do it if Putin invaded Ukraine is painful. Now he's got to deny having anything to do with it, after threatening that it would be easy. They've got to act like they don't see what we're finding out. The mainstream is in full protection mode. Surely they couldn't survive another election of Trump, and hope they don't have to. Another special council has been named, and if there's one thing they want you to know it is that he's aggressive. Maybe they'll get Trump yet.

How many times have they tried? We've lost count.

Meanwhile the media is busy telling God off. They aired something that resembled... You go find out what they did at the Grammy Awards. I didn't watch it, but saw some of the still pictures. It's like they're trying to goad the Creator into action. We need a complete overhaul if this nation is to survive intact. Insulting the Creator is not a healthy pass-time.

Mark

P. S. We've almost got another issue of 21st Century WATCH magazine laid out. We've put advertisements for our calendar in the Tyler paper, and they look great. Michael and Melody are hard at it, and I thank God for them. Now, if we can just keep up with all that's going wrong!
