

Weekly Update by Mark Armstrong - February 2, 2024

Greetings from Tyler,

There's so much to make your blood boil, it's hard to know where to start. By now most everybody has seen the video of the policemen being attacked in Times Square by a gang of illegals. They caught the perpetrators, who kicked and beat one policeman on the ground and jumped on another. Apparently the perpetrators were apprehended, released and are on a bus to California where the atmosphere for illegals is perfect.

Where are the reports about the tractors shutting down major hubs all over Europe? You can find it, but you have to go looking. When you do find it, you'll see tractors clogging Brussels' streets along with Paris and other targets. It looks like many of their demands will be met, quietly.

The left is PETRIFIED of another Donald Trump presidency. It's so unacceptable they can't even talk about it without an insult or two. But they have to report the results of political races, so that's the time to tune in, when they're choking on what they have to say. You'll also see them taking the opportunity to lampoon Christians, for obvious reasons. One guy says he'll, "convert back to Christianity just so I can be first in line for the rapture." There's so much wrong with that, it can't be covered in an update. But this is on Yahoo along with a whole bunch of other articles that decry the inevitable. They're running out of strategies.

E. Jean Carroll has been awarded millions on the basis of an unbelievable story. My only question, "Where was the entourage?" Anyway, she's won a vast sum of money, and she's living it up on channels I don't watch. She's absolutely beside herself with glee, promising gifts to TV anchors who can't contain their delight.

I have to see what they're saying sometimes, mad as it makes me. You can't overstate how the left is wallowing in panic. Every article on these left-wing websites is something about Trump, always negative. It's not just that he might pull the country out of the nosedive we're in, and they can't have that! It wouldn't be fair! Besides, the pretender is doing great. Just look at their numbers!

This is going to be one interesting year. All the news right now is celebrating a roaring economy. They can hardly believe the economic revolution that's taking place. If you want to know about it, you'll have to read up. Yeah, it turns out the pretender has done a masterful job. He's riding high, and there's nothing on the horizon but smooth sailing. Now, back to reality.

Maybe it's too much to hope for, but it looks like this global warming nonsense is blowing up all over the world. Years were wasted on fanciful clap-trap that didn't work as advertised. Some brave advertisers are still trying to get you to buy a battery car. Other's its seems, have given up. Why send good money after bad with all the advertising they've done? It would be curious to find out how much they've spent on TV alone trying to convince us that battery cars are glamorous. Maybe they are, but we saw people pushing their Teslas in the snow. That's a definite demerit.

It's not like the manufacturers didn't play the government's game for reasons we'll probably never know. But alas, reality dawns. Nobody wants a wildly expensive car that might strand you in the freezing cold. I like Elon Musk. The feats he's pulled off are unbelievable. I've watched the booster rockets return to their launch pads, and it's amazing. How is it he doesn't know that freezing temperatures and batteries don't mix? Not that battery cars don't have their place, as a second or third vehicle. You'd hate to have to depend on one!

This is a time for skepticism. The mainstream news is deceptive, to say the least. They try to make it seem like we need to get on their bandwagon, or... or... We'll destroy the planet?

It's not easy to find, but there's a tractor protest blocking all kinds of European thoroughfares. The Davos crowd foisted this nonsense on Europe first, and for the most part everybody went along. But the reality of actually saving the planet has dawned. They want to say it's about government subsidies for this or that, but the policies have global warming as their basis. We can't tell if the earth is getting warmer or not, but these policies are going to put farmers out of business.

Diversity, equity and inclusion are going to put major corporations out of business. It's putting us all in danger. Unqualified people doing jobs that belong to highly skilled people. What could go wrong?

Despite the news telling us everything is great, it clearly isn't. The showdown over the border seems to have been won by Texas. Turns out barriers work. So the cartels will just send them to one of the other border states. There will be consequences. There already are, and it makes a patriot's blood boil.

We're facing a challenging year, with the news bound and determined to get us to see it their way. Unfortunately they've been compromised by so-called modern philosophy. We reject that.
