

Weekly Update by Mark Armstrong - June 9, 2023

Greetings from Tyler,

The biggest news this week is the indictment of Donald Trump. Maybe the fifth or sixth time (I've lost count) will be the one that does it! Can you even remember the players or the details of any of the previous attempts to get this guy out of public life? The pretender says MAGA like it's a curse word. The guys who made claims and went after Trump haven't fared so well. The claims were made up but the news, who flogged them nearly to death haven't admitted anything. This time they've worked hard to reveal that Trump might have said something that incriminates him. On a document charge! Here's hoping Jack Smith joins Clapper, Comey, and all the rest of the gang eating humble pie.

What else can they do? They obviously don't dare allow Trump to win the next election. He's giving speeches saying he knows who's who and what's what now, and will utterly dismantle the deep state. As in fire them all. They cannot let that happen.

So they have to get him. They can't let him get re-elected and shut down their departments. So they've researched long and hard to find a process crime. What was he going to do, betray the United States? We all know the answer to that. But we do know somebody who did. Maybe the investigators will get a clue, but probably not. Trump now has to deal with another legal attack that the prosecutors hope will land him in jail. I doubt it, but here we go again.

It's not like they've got a shortage of crimes to go after. We can name them off the top of our heads. But they've got to get rid of Trump. If this doesn't work, it'll go on and on. Thirty seven counts? They really want to put him away for good. What's left? If they miss this time...oh baby.

Chinese aircraft have sent the Taiwanese scrambling, operating as they are now inside Taiwan's safe zone. Everybody has seen the footage of the near misses at sea and in the air, and those were with American assets. We don't rightly know what all we'd have to do without in the event of hostilities. It almost seems that we're at war with China, everybody but the pretender. We don't know what policies are in place, but we can see the provocative incidents. Something's not right, but let's just go on pretending for now.

If the United States doesn't figure out how to source necessities, we could well be doing without things that seem ordinary. What will we do when we can no longer access solar panels? I've flown over one of these solar farms in the desert. Where did all that come from? We get preached at day and night about going green. Looks like the green stuff comes from China, and the Chinese don't even believe in global warming, but they're happy to do business.

The WSJ reports that China has reached a deal with impoverished Cuba to install hi-tech electronics and a "listening station." Kirby says it's not true amid some discussion of national security.

These guys the pretender's administration trot out to give us the straight scoop are pitiful. No need to name names, you know the names. Somehow, they seem to have screwed everything up. Wars are in the offing that we never saw coming. Now we're at loggerheads with China and Russia, and partnerships that were forged over long decades in the Middle East are evaporating.

I hate to say it, but the deep state should have been cleaned out in the first place. But maybe we were following events closer than Trump was. He's been stabbed in the back so many times it's unbelievable. Now he knows how the deck is stacked, but it may be too late. We hope he prays. We do.

Mark
